

while after this dear little Girl was carried to School by her Maid, (for she loved to learn her Book as good Children do) and as they were going along, they met a poor Man, who complain'd that he was hungry; her Maid was frightened, she knew him; he was her Countryman, and had been her Father's Master; but the Maid had no Money in her Pocket; Miss gave him all her's, and ask'd him what Trade he was; the Maid told her he was a Farmer, and made the Corn grow. Ay, said Miss, and do you get the Bread and Pudding out of the Ground for other Folks, and can they be so hard-hearted as to give you nothing to eat? A little while after when the School was done, as the Miss was not at School that used to go home with her, Miss Nancy thought she could go home by herself, but was hardly out of the Door, when she saw a mad Dog running to bite her; she was sadly frightened, and ran away back again as fast as she could; the Dog ran after her, and would certainly have hurt her, if the poor Man, she had before given a Penny to, had not run and knock'd down the Dog, and sav'd her.
